

CAMP BINGO CARD

Overnight Camp Bingo: Parent Edition

Sending your kid off to sleepaway camp? This handy dandy game will help you navigate the emotional rollercoaster of letting go.

BY BETH KANTER

Construct deluxe she shed from your Amazon camp shopping box collection	Mad Libs remorse	Practice your "You've got this" face for drop-off	Weep in car after bus pulls away	Promise the dog they'll be back soon
Purchase, launder and pack 14 pairs of brand-new sport socks	Unpack 13 pairs of brand-new sport socks	Don hazmat suit and torch one pair of worn-every-day-for-two-weeks sport socks	BRUNCH	Wake up every hour on the hour to check for new photos
Compose nastygram accusing the camp photographer of hating you, your child and the American way	Melt when you finally spot your camper's smiling face	FREE SPACE: Competitive care packaging	Subsist on steady diet of Sweetgreen and sangria	Attempt to party like it's 1999
Convince yourself you've misplaced your wallet	Convince yourself you've misplaced your glasses	Realize you have both your wallet and glasses but have been walking around feeling as though you've misplaced your child	Sunday morning sleep-ins	Homesick letter heartbreak
Signatureless letter that reads: "They're making me write this."	Child-free beach vacation bliss	Up side-eye game for friend who repeatedly insists, "I could never send my kid away."	Read every book on your nightstand	Marvel at the slightly taller, more independent and more confident child returned to you

In addition to packing her fair share of camp-bound duffel bags, Beth Kanter has written six books about the DC area, including No Access DC, Great Food Finds DC and Washington, DC's Chef Table.